

displayed by the masses, - the majority of whom have no vote - at the continued exploitation of their resources.

This paper is also loud and long in its cry for police brutality and have succeeded by having the Riot Act read, with dire predictions of Martial law before the end of the elections.

It sounds, it applause in an Editorial in the issue of the 21st Jan.

"Happily at Loxrivers, Trelawny, the police acted promptly, and apparently, with both strength and discretion. They were compelled to fire, but they killed and wounded no one."

From Marcus Garvey, in his