

Candidates are so obviously weak that aside from the vague promises, they make at meetings the rest of the time is spent abusing opponents and citing past deeds as to building of roads and bridges to facilitate producers — the large landowners of course.

Then there are still hard feelings against the Jamaica Banana Producers Association, which ruined the industry in the island for the benefit of the few, and the Banana Insurance Bill which is hanging over the heads of small planters.

Separate articles will have to be written on these, but there are merely
